In Greece, VINCI Highways and its partners open Patras–Pyrgos highway

- A new step in Greece’s strategy to develop its national network through the concession model
- A €331M investment integrated into the Olympia Odos concession contract
- VINCI Highways committed to supporting the next phase: Pyrgos–Tsakona

The last section of the Patras–Pyrgos highway opened today in the presence of Christos Dimas, Greek Minister of Transport and Infrastructure. This milestone marks a new step in Greece’s strategy of expanding its national road network through the concession model, which drives the modernization and connectivity of the country.

As part of the integration of this new section into the existing Olympia Odos concession, VINCI Highways and its partners¹ were in charge of the design, financing and program management of the 75-kilometer corridor and will operate it until 2044. This approach enabled the Greek State to accelerate delivery while ensuring a consistent operational standard across the network.

This €331M investment transforms the former national road into a modern, safe and efficient highway. The new corridor improves travel times, strengthens road safety and enhances access to key destinations in Western Peloponnese. New technologies including fully automated tolling, EV charging and upcoming solar-powered operations, contribute to better service quality and environmental performance.

The opening of Patras–Pyrgos comes as the Greek Government assesses the next phase of network development, including the potential extension from Pyrgos to Tsakona. VINCI Highways, a long-term partner of Greece and the country’s leading international highway operator, remains fully committed to supporting the Government in this next strategic step.
